

Diamond Drill

Out of the Past

January 6, 1949

Alex Dalpra, Diamond Drill linotype operator, rates as number one possession his rabbit dog "Bruno". Recently Diz Aescliman, Chet Sartori and Babe Tirapelli decided they would like to do a little hunting over the weekend so acquired the services of Bruno to improve their chances of a successful hunt. The party took off for the McCutcheon country making the Sartori Camp their headquarters. After an unsuccessful hunt in the nearby swamp, it was discovered that Bruno was nowhere to be found. For an hour the hunters combed the underbrush in search of the missing canine before finally giving up assuming Bruno was lost. Upon returning to camp to their surprise and relief they discovered Bruno asleep on one of the bunks. Alex's only explanation was that Bruno apparently is a one man dog. Compare this to the performance of John Guyon's rabbit dog "Butch". In two recent hunting expeditions John along with his brother Louie, Alex Bartolini, Joe Haluska, Alex Sliva and Francis Villeneuve reported harvesting 60 bunnies while heaping high praise on the efforts of Butch.